From the President & Executive Director

When meeting someone for the first time, the question often arises: “Where do you live?” It’s a simple question that provides the inquirer some insight about you, based on their preconceptions. Where you live is part of who you are.

But what does it mean to “live” somewhere? The definition of the word can imply a meaning as basic as the place where you reside.

Being a member of FutureHeights indicates that you choose to do more than just reside in Cleveland Heights or University Heights. It means that you value the aspects of our communities which make them different from other suburbs. Perhaps it’s the walkability of our neighborhoods or the proximity to downtown or University Circle. For some, it’s the comfort of being in the place where they grew up, and for others it’s the unique shopping and dining options available.

These are but a few things that our communities provide to us. But what do we provide to our communities in return?

Throughout the pages of this report you’ll be introduced to initiatives that FutureHeights has undertaken this past year that we believe make a difference in our communities and keep our citizenry engaged. As you will see, our role is to provide the conduit, such as hosting community forums, sponsoring speakers or publishing a community newspaper. None of what we’ve accomplished would be possible without the involvement of our members, and for that, we thank you.

In order for us to continue to fulfill our mission, FutureHeights needs our members to continue to be good stewards of the cities in which they live. Not only is it important for the long-term viability of our cities, it’s easy to do. Tell your neighbors what’s going on by writing an article for the Heights Observer, the area’s only hyper-local news written by citizens. Visit the Heights Libraries, and commit to doing more of your shopping with our local merchants. Finally, let us know what we can do to ensure the Heights of the future is what the citizens want it to be.

For our members, to “live” in Cleveland Heights or University Heights means that we take responsibility not only for our homes, but also for our neighborhoods and our cities.

How does FutureHeights (FH) pursue its mission to engage citizens with the goal of ensuring a vibrant and sustainable future for the Heights? By providing information, education and advocacy on issues that are important to Heights residents.

Providing information
The Heights Observer has become a trusted source for Heights-centric news and information. FH published another 12 issues of the print edition in 2010, with the help of several dedicated volunteer citizen-journalists and editors. Another group of volunteers helped distribute the paper, and it is available to the public, free of charge, in more than 178 Heights locations. As community participation and advertising revenues have increased, so has the size of the paper; the print issue now regularly features 24 pages, all of it hyper local and relevant to Heights readers. Each month new volunteers become engaged in the process of reporting on issues that are important to them, fulfilling the project’s mission of promoting increased citizen interaction and participation in local public life.

In 2011, FH focused its efforts on expanding the Observer’s online presence. FH launched a new blog site, http://blogs.heightsobserver.org/, began publishing stories to its website daily, increased the frequency of its e-newsletter and stepped up its social media communications via Twitter and Facebook.

FH continues to work with a variety of organizations and individuals to help them tell their stories, sponsoring nine free workshops in 2010. Each was taught by professional journalists and focused on topics, such as basic news coverage and digital photography. FH partnered with the CH-UH City School District and the Cleveland Heights High School Alumni Foundation to publish four issues of the high school’s student newspaper, the Black & Gold, in 2010-11, as an insert in the Observer, raising the paper’s profile in the community.

Providing education and fostering dialogue
FH brought a variety of speakers to the Heights in 2010. Jeff Milchen, co-founder of the American Independent Business Alliance, presented “Strength in Numbers,” which prompted Heights business owners to form their own alliance. Called the Heights Independent Business Alliance, the group is now working to promote increased citizen interaction and participation in local public life.

FH focuses on expanding the Observer’s online presence. FH launched a new blog site, http://blogs.heightsobserver.org/, began publishing stories to its website daily, increased the frequency of its e-newsletter and stepped up its social media communications via Twitter and Facebook.

FH continues its work of advocating for high quality and sustainability in design and architecture; a regional approach to innovation, planning and development; preservation of our historic neighborhoods and commercial districts; and innovative ideas in addressing the challenges of inner ring suburbs. FH reviewed and commented on the City of Cleveland Heights’s Strategic Development Plan draft and Green Zoning initiative. FH partnered with the Cleveland Heights Historical Society and the Cleveland Heights Landmark Commission to host a series of walking tours and lectures during May, historic preservation month.

FH recognizes the importance of a thriving local business community to the health of our cities and continues to educate residents on the benefits of shopping locally. A record number of people participated in the 2010 Best of the Heights survey and attended the awards ceremony held at Motorcars Toyota in October 2010.

FH acknowledged citizens who volunteer for the betterment of the community by inducting four new members to the Innovator’s Circle in 2010: community volunteers, Lee and Tuni Chilcote; former FH board member, Mark Majewski; and community activist, Diana Woodbridge. The 2011 ceremony recognized the significance of the community by inducting four new members to the Innovator’s Circle in 2010: community volunteers, Lee and Tuni Chilcote; former FH board member, Mark Majewski; and community activist, Diana Woodbridge.

Looking to the future
FH will continue to invest your donation dollars wisely to provide quality programming to engage citizens in building a better place. Through tools, such as the Heights Observer, community forums, speakers and surveys, FH will continue to provide a space for public dialogue on the issues that matter to us most. Thank you for your support!
